

PROUD MOTHER — Lady, a rare Blue Great Dane, strikes a dignified stance as she looks over her brood of 13 puppies which she gave birth to on Feb. 11. Lady's owner, Terry Hainline, 35758 Nancy, Farmington, is now busy helping to keep those 13 tumblers full with supplementary feedings. The pups are purebred offspring of Mr. Beauregard, another Great Dane Blue, and Lady, who is the only female Blue in the state.

Computer To Go Farming

How you going to keep 'em down on the farm after the computers take over?

Michigan and national scientists have issued a report that big overalls, the hoe and the tractor will be obsolete in the 21st century.

Super-sophisticated machinery that does everything will be run by computer—presumably clad in overalls, adding a touch of old-fashioned 20th century to the scene.

By then, too, you'll buy fruit that grew inside its own packaging. Scientific advances will make that possible predicts a group of embryonic eggheads asked to envision farm, U.S.A.,

Timber's A Crop

Trees ripen just like farm crops. If they become over-ripe, they decay and become subject to insect and disease attacks. Tree farmers harvest mature trees, so new crop can grow.

Tomorrow's farmer, it develops, won't depend on the whims of mother nature for rain or sun. His crops will grow in an enclosure where climate is controlled.

Upon command from a computer, ultrahigh frequency sounds will break up the ground. This will be followed by heat producing equipment that will kill the weeds. Time pills that will kill the insects in the future will be placed at strategic places.

Each seed, planted by a mobile robot, will be clustered with the "spills" containing fertilizer, herbicides, insecticides—plus other things necessary to war on all threats to the crop during growth.

The farmer, as the students figure, only will go into the field twice. Once—to check on the plants. And once more—at harvest-time.

The barnyard as known today will go the way of the hoe. Animals will live out their lives

Heroes In Pickups Patrol State Roads

The colorful night watch of early America has not entirely disappeared from the scene.

The watch, subject of a 17th Century Rembrandt painting and Currier and Ives prints of the last century, patrolled cities and villages to warn of fires, floods and natural disasters.

Its modern counterpart, the State Highway Commission's road patrol, doesn't shout anything as spectacular as "the British are coming," but it does perform a valuable service for motorists.

Each night during the winter, the patrol covers 9,200 miles of state highway in pickup trucks equipped with radios, showoffs, flashlights, flares, sand and salt.

The patrolmen report snow storms, ice, washouts, and fallen trees and wires.

In most instances, plows and other emergency equipment are dispatched from nearby highway maintenance garages and the patrolmen continue their rounds.

On occasion, however, the patrolmen are called upon for emergency aid, as evidenced in the following excerpts from the log of Patrolman James Lowman of Hopkins:

• First on the scene of an auto-truck accident. Administered artificial respiration to a child and bandaged another victim.

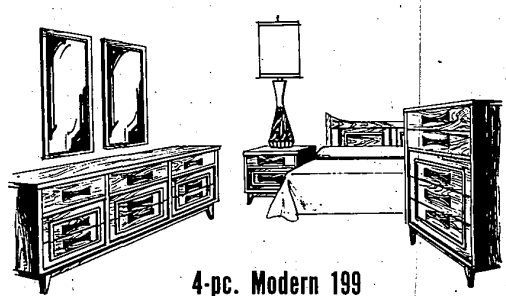

• Pulled a motorist from a vehicle which had crashed through a bridge guardrail into the Gunn River on US-131 north of Plainville.
