

Whips N. Carolina In Final

UCLA Routs Houston Enroute To Second Title

Never before had a final in the NCAA basketball tournament been so anti-climatic. Nor never before had the championship game been so one-sided.

The title went to UCLA for the second year in a row as the Bruins stormed past North Carolina 78-55.

But, as far as the country was concerned, the crown actually had been determined the night before when UCLA made shambles of Houston's No. 1 Cougars, 101-49.

UCLA had ranked No. 2 behind Houston, which put an unbeaten record on the line. It also was Houston that downed UCLA, 71-69, earlier in the season to end its 47-game Bruin winning streak.

Hayes, touted as a clinch to collect $200,000 when he turns professional, had one of his sickest games in college. He made only 10 points and five rebounds. Alcindor and Co. completely bottled up the Big E, a 30-point average score all season.

But UCLA arose to gain its revenge in the most lopsided game ever staged in the NCAA semis and then followed the next night with a similar effort against North Carolina.

ALCINDOR WAS the big show against North Carolina, which had coasted past Ohio State, 80-66, in the other half of the semifinals Friday.

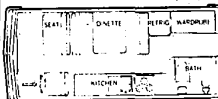

WHAT WAS the reason Houston did so well earlier in the season against UCLA and then collapsed in the rematch? Coach Johnny Wooden of UCLA, which now has won the NCAA crown four times in the last five years, put it this way: "When we first faced Houston, Lew Alcindor was just a shell of himself. He was suffering an eye injury. Some experts didn't accept this as a valid excuse.

North Carolina tried a slow-down against UCLA. The tactics worked briefly as North Carolina led, 13-12, early in the first half.

UCLA ALSO WAS fired up for the rematch. Houston wasn't. The Bruins made 51.3 percent of their shots and boasted a balanced scoring at-
