Cooperation Urged For Schools, Business

Schools and business must provide answers to the social problems in the country today. If they don't, the government will step in and do it. This was what the Westland Chamber of Commerce was told last week by the youngest man in the room, 23-year-old Timothy Dyer, principal of Adlai Stevenson Junior High School, to open its doors for 1,200 students next fall.

Dyer, as guest speaker at the chamber's monthly membership meetings, also told the group that there must be better education and a firmer business community. "We must constantly pound away at problems," he continued. "We can't look to man yesterday to solve tomorrow's problems and we can't look to the past."

He also said that education and business go hand-in-hand and one can't survive without the other. Dyer also commented that there already are many areas of cooperation between schools and private businesses in the co-op programs, and adult education programs. There is technical training now offered in public schools through and shop and computer classes.

But he pointed to a problem which has a raft of good teachers in those technical classes. "The 'Convention Fashion Show' was held with guests coming from Jaycees Auxiliaries in Garden City, Redford, Wayne, Livonia, Plymouth, and Dearborn Heights.

'Fashion' Show Held

The "Convention Fashion Show" featuring official uniforms to be worn at local and state events was held by the Westland Jaycees Auxiliary at its March membership meeting Wednesday. The "Convention Fashion Show" was held with guests coming from Jaycees Auxiliaries in Garden City, Redford, Wayne, Livonia, Plymouth, and Dearborn Heights. The auxiliary said that the purpose for the fashion show was to create interest in the state Jaycees convention scheduled for next month by showing some of the local color to its members. The members asked the other auxiliaries to loan them their uniforms to make the show possible, an auxiliary spokesman said. On the committee planning the meeting were chairman Mrs. Robert Padgett, Mrs. Phil Spada, Mrs. James Hogg, and Mrs. Bill Bishop.

The members asked the other auxiliaries to loan them their uniforms to make the show possible, an auxiliary spokesman said.
