Buying A House Is Taxing

When purchasing a home, most of us realize the importance of ascertaining the amount of any taxes due and owing. This awareness frequently results in an adjustment of the purchasing price requiring the seller to bear the expense of those taxes which accrued during his ownership and occupancy.

Often, however, in the purchase of a business or business assets, we overlook the possibility that the purchase price should be adjusted to properly distribute the tax liability between the purchaser and the seller.

The LACK of awareness by purchasers of the taxes for which they may become liable has, resulted in a large number of appeals by employers from determinations of the Michigan Employment Securities Commission.

Two major classes of appeals directly result from business acquisitions. One is that employers as a result of a business purchase become subject to the payment of contributions (taxes) under the provisions of the Michigan Employment Securities Act.

The other general class of appeals is from holdings by the commission that the employer contribution rate under the act should be increased as a result of such acquisition.
