The president of the Michigan Association of Non-Public Schools hailed a U.S. Supreme Court ruling upholding a New York law requiring public school systems to lend textbooks to students in non-public schools.

The textbook lending program was challenged on grounds that it violated the U.S. Constitution's ban on "establishment of religion."

Supreme Court Justice Byron R. White, who wrote the textbook case opinion, ruled that the lending of books to non-public school students benefits the children and not the schools they attend.

"...Parochial schools are performing, in addition to their secular education," Justice White wrote.

OAKLAND HAS lost numerous top men, including President John E. Tirrell, who headed the college since October 1964.

Tirrell's salary was bought out at $41,000, including $32,000 for his last year. This would indicate that he was ousted or forced to resign rather than that he resigned voluntarily.

Tirrell, in quitting, told the board that "it was difficult to respond negatively to requests for counsel and assistance from various groups outside of the college." He added that it was apparent his job would conflict with his desire to become involved in "some of the exciting and creative challenges" he saw in education.

The company Tirrell will work for was, in part, founded by him.

OAKLAND'S NEW president, Hergenroeder will serve as "interim" chief executive until a new one is appointed. According to George Mosher, chairman of the board, he is among the candidates for the top spot.

the education business," Mosher noted. "There are some 200 presidencies open right now. This college got national attention; we were visited by presidents of every community college in the country. We are better known nationally than in the county, and I'm sure we lost people because of that."

Mosher agreed some may have left because they were dissatisfied. Four or five men, he explained, became presidents of their own colleges.

Others, like Jim Hobson, were high-powered executives who moved to the top of their field. Hobson is vice chancellor of business at UCLA.

"And, I see people continuing to come and go in this field," Mosher said.

Mosher, who is an attorney with General Motors, said he did not detect any poor morale on campus.

The college had pioneered in tutorial learning—packaged education with heavy emphasis on individualized learning and wide use of audio-visual materials. The college is still in good hands, as people have been moved up to fill the spots vacated by resignation, Mosher added.

"We may be high for the state, but we are not high for the nation. At best, we are a bit above average; but we are as competitive as it might appear."
