In the second stage, one to twoinch pike, the food volume mainly consists of immature aquatic insects. Competition between young pike and most other species of pike and most other species of tha for such tood is most evident. Other (sh feeding on these in-sects include yellow perch and many minnow varieties. How much bearing competition for insects has in survival and growth can-not readily be measured since no information is available concern-ing the adequacy of the supply. However, competition certainly re-duced the supply and is suspected of being a struiticant factor in young pike mortaility.
