EDITOR SAYS U. S. SHOULD HAVE MORE REPORTERS ABROAD

America's global news coverage is "woefully inadequate," writes a foreign news editor in the current "Quarterly Review" of the University of Michigan.

Foreign correspondents are disappearing because news agencies won't pay the price to maintain them, reports Russell F. Anderson, editor of "World News" published by the McGraw Hill Company.

Only 293 Americans were overseas before the Korean War as full-time correspondents for U. S. newspapers, magazines, press associations and radio networks, according to a survey Anderson conducted.

News of the start of the Korean War caught Americans flat-footed, he says. Hardly any of them had the slightest idea that a major conflict was in the making, much less any understanding of the issues at stake.

"Had Korea been adequately staffed with correspondents, American readers would have understood the underlying situation that existed. Chances are, too, that the U. S. military would not have been caught napping had prewar developments been fully covered."

"The Korean example is not the exception. It is the rule. Should war break out today in Greece, Iran, Turkey, Yugoslavia, or any of the other smoldering areas of the world (except Germany), the same lack of pre-war reporting would prevail."

Key figures in government draw heavily from press reports in formulating their judgments, Anderson writes.

The sometimes unrealistic moves by the U. S. State Department, and foolish policy demands from the floor of Congress, are the telltale tipoffs as to just how important foreign press coverage is in formulating official government opinion.

by a score of years. This year, he built and painted no less than 50 of them. The toys are made in his workshop at home. According to Justice John J. Schulte, Jr., Goodfellow chairman, "The Goodfellows have never asked whether or he's going to bring us toys — he always just carries them in a few days before Christmas."

The Lady Sharpshooters Monday bowling league is also among the large individual donors. The league contributed $25 to the Goodfellow fund during the one-day paper sale of special Goodfellow editions of the Farmington Enterprise.

The City of Farmington and Farmington Township also contributed heavily to the Goodfellow cause with the city offering $50 and the township $200.

The list of needy families was compiled for the organization by representatives of local governments, doctors, and social workers.

Dr. M. E. Whitehead, Theodore Lund and Curtis Hall were elected to the Board of Control.

George Lind was received into membership at the meeting, at which William Garamhan was program chairman. Garamhan's program consisted of having each member give an episode in his life. Delos Hamlin and Walter Coon led community singing.

In the absence of Claude Goodes, Albert Herzig acted as secretary. Lauren Clifford entertained with the piano at the meeting.

The general meeting of the Michigan Exchange Club will be held in Lansing on January 13. At the last Farmington Exchange meeting, Howard Thayer won the weekly prize.

MRS. STOVER NAMED COMMITTEE HEAD OF WOMEN'S BUREAU

Mrs. Ralph Chamberlain was in charge of the elections, which saw Mrs. Fred Upcraft named to the vice-chairman's post, and Mrs. Frank Winterhalter elected secretary-treasurer. Historian and publicity chairman's jobs went to Mrs. Iva Miller and Mrs. James Stuart, respectively.

Mr. Herman Howlison was speaker at the meeting, at which gifts were wrapped for a Christmas party at the polo hospital in Pontiac. The next meeting of the Women's Committee will take place Tuesday, January 9, at Stonecrest on Liberty Street in Walled Lake. Mrs. Marjorie Karker will be guest speaker.

Following the evening service, the Watch Night service will be continued, beginning with the showing of a film "The Call of the Southern Cross", a missionary picture. The movie will be followed by an hour of Singing and fellowship conducted by the young people of the church. Refreshments will be served. From 11 p.m. to 12 midnight, a religious service, to be concluded by a candlelight communion, will be held.

It's soon gonna be 1951 — and we could go on at great lengths and thank you for your past patronage — but you know we appreciated it — and we hope to serve you longer — and all kinds of stuff like that there — but we hope — like you hope — that this New Year will straighten out this troubled old world and once again, and for always, peace on earth and good will toward men will prevail.
