Fertilizer Adds To Sudan Yields

Lots of good fence is the goal many farmers this summer and it can be aided through fertilization, says James A. Porter, Michigan State College soil scientist.

A profitable increase in forage production will result from heavy fertilization of Sudan grass planted right after corn planting, he states. If possible, the field should be mowed heavily before plowing. Otherwise, apply a 10-6-4 or 8-8-8 commercial fertilizer at 350 pounds per acre at plowing time.

If a legume seedling is to be made in the Sudan, the 8-8-8 is more preferable.

Productive Sudan causes the grazing load on alfalfa and alfalfa-bean in the late summer and early fall, Porter advises. That is the time when alfalfa must build up food reserves to carry it through the winter and give good growth the following spring.

Red canary grass should be fertilized when planted and every second year with 0-27 fertilizer at 300 pounds per acre.

TRAINS RUN THROUGH HOTEL — The little mining town of Burke, Id., has a hotel with one of the busiest lobbies in the world. Just because it got in the way of a fast freight. The town is wedged in a valley through which the railroad must go, so a tunnel was bored through the center of the hotel.
