"Go to Church Sunday."

Don't forget to register and tomorrow is the day.

April showers arrived promptly on schedule. So did April Fool's day.

Well, let it rain now. Base ball season doesn't open until the fourteenth.

A news note says that Port Huron is making efforts for a commercial club of 500 members, the money derived therefrom to be spent in boosting the town.

"Spitting on the Sidewalk Forbidden by order of the Board of Health," is the way 500 new signs that are to be posted in Detroit shortly, will read. Good for Detroit, and here's hoping they enforce it, as it is high time something along this line were done.

Democratic leaders over the states are more or less alarmed over the split in the House over the split on the Tolls Repeal Bill, asked by the President, and carried against the opposition of Champ Clark and practically all of the house leaders by a majority of 86.

Now that the city of Torreon has fallen, and is in the hands of Gen. Villa, the provisional president is figuring on leaving the country, so say the newspaper dispatches. Trouble is he "don't know Huertago." N. B.—Use Mexican emphasis in pronouncing president's name.

Several new advertisements are to be found in the Enterprise columns this week, and we are naturally glad to be able to call attention to them. Read the ads, study them, as you will invariably find better and newer goods at the store of the merchant who is endeavoring to attract customers, new and old to his store.

During the past week we have talked with several of the business men concerning a Commercial Club for Farmington, and in each instance, the idea has been favorably received. Each wide-awake town should have its own boosting organization, and we believe that the day is not very far distant when Farmington will be represented.

When you go to the polls next week to cast your vote for new township officials, give the matter a little careful consideration. Let your vote be for the man or men who in your opinion are the better qualified, regardless of political affiliations.

If the wearing of little blue buttons is any indication, Farmington is going to have a big "Go to Church Sunday." Nearly everyone you meet is wearing one or more of the little badges of honor, and everything points to record breaking attendance.

BEETLE THAT EATS LEAD DISCOVERED

Insect with Peculiar Appetite Subject of Much Interest in Scientific World.

Insects of the beetle family have been accused of many mysterious things ever since they were hoisted on totem poles and worshipped by Pharaoh and brother Esquimaux. The latest discovery is that of a beetle that eats lead.

Instances in which the little lead eaters have been caught in the act are so few that naturalists are now seeking more specimens. At present the head of a well known academy of natural science is making a study of a well preserved specimen which was recently found in the fuse of a telephone in Chicago.

The first known instance of the work of this beetle was in Australia, where it either bored or ate a hole through the lead armor of a telephone cable. Another specimen was found in a telephone cable in California.

Attacks Telephone Fuse. A telephone user in Chicago complained recently that his telephone was in trouble. Upon examination it was found that the fuse was open. The only clue to the cause was several larvae lying inside the fuse—the larva is that stage in the development of an insect immediately following the egg stage. These small, shell-like forms were left in the fuse and watched closely until one of them dropped into a small beehive about half an inch in length. For purposes of observation, the beetle, with the fuse, was placed in a glass jar. It was observed that he attacked only the lead parts and avoided the other metals which comprise the wire. He lived, and the conclusion was that he subsisted on the lead.

Beetle Being Studied. The true character of these beetles will be known when results of the study now being made are announced. A microscopic photograph of its mandibles—a scientific word which means an insect's jaws—will be taken to determine whether it bites or bores. A scientist has already classified it as a miniature form of the beetle Dermestes Vulpinus, belonging to the family Dermestidae. A peculiar thing noted about the insect is that to date it has been found only in telephone cable or fuses, with the exception of one instance and that was a telephone pole in which a parent beetle bored through a lead plate to deposit eggs. It is safe to say, however, that no tombstones will be erected in its honor if it be found to be an almost extinct variety.

GETS REWARD FOR USING SAND TO PUT OUT BLAZE

Quick-witted Employee Saves Suburb's Telephone Service by Not Using Liquid.

Because an employe used a can of sand to put out a small fire instead of a liquid fire extinguisher, which would have been more convenient, he was rewarded with a substantial check by his employer.

Grover Krautz, an employe in a telephone exchange in one of Chicago's suburbs, was walking near the switchboard when he smelled smoke. He found several cords inside the switchboard cabinet on fire. Quick as a flash he reached for an extinguisher. The liquid container was nearest, but his presence of mind directed him to the can of sand a little farther off. After subduing the fire he reached into the mass of charred wires, grabbed the smoking cords and tore them from the switchboard.

The damage was small—all because he used the sand. The liquid extinguisher would have rendered all the wires it touched useless and might have deprived a part of the suburb of telephone service.

WORLD'S HIGHEST TELEPHONE. Three miles above the sea level, on the peak of Monto Rosa in the Italian Alps, is found the highest telephone in the world. This telephone is connected by a private wire from the astronomical observatory on Monto Rosa to the royal palace in Rome.
