CHILDREN NEED REGULAR MEALS DURING SUMMER

Your growing children should eat regular meals during the summer. It's sometimes a problem to get them to stop being "too busy playing" to eat.

Foods and nutrition specialists at Michigan State College have a couple of hints that they hope will help make the job easier. They say that getting children to eat the basic seven foods is easy when meals are served regularly.

Regular mealtimes will help prevent the formation of the "munching habit." Nibbling on sweets may temporarily satisfy hunger, but it does not satisfy the body's need for nourishing food, they remind mothers.

"If your child needs a between-meal snack, make it a point to serve some of the basic seven foods as parts of their daily diet. A small glass of fruit juice, fresh fruit, milk, a crisp vegetable or bread and butter are ideas for snacks," the MSC specialists remind.

"AMERIGO" IS AMERICA BOUND—For the first time in 16 years the Italian training ship Amerigo Vespucci will pay her respects to the country named after Italy's famous explorer. After setting sail and starting out from Leghorn, Italy, 140 cadets, looking forward to liberty in Annapolis, Boston and New York, manned the ship's yards to acknowledge the bon voyage wishes of Italian Defense Minister R. Paccardi and U. S. Ambassador James C. Dunn.
