You can probably do it in less than three. Larger jobs, like replacing an engine, can take an amateur weeks--a pro can do it in a day--and the cost of the engine is such a large percentage of the total is probably isn't worth it. Tools cost a small fortune -- a single wrench can cost about $3.50. The problem with tools is that for the home car repairer, they are rarely used often enough to justify their cost. Diagnosis is also crucial to successful home-repair. Just what is making that clanking noise? Diagnosis is a problem for the pros too. Diagnostic centers have been set up -- Volkswagen has even installed electronic sensors in their new cars that are supposed to let a computer do the job. Soliciting the advice of the mechanic you are trying to replace is one way to address the problem.
