

Farmington's Jill Renich Has 2nd Book Published

A book on woman's view of marriage, the second from the pen of Farmington's Jill Renich, now is on sale in area religious book stores.

"To Have and To Hold" is subtitled "the feminine mystique at work in a happy marriage" by Mrs. Renich, leader of the women's group known as "Winning Women."

The wife of the Rev. Fred Renich, until recently director of missionary internships in Farmington, Mrs. Renich also is the author of "So You're a Teen-Aged Girl."

In a preface to her new book, she writes that while many books on marriage are meant to be read by both partners, "this one is more helpful if read only by the wife."

Explaining in the preface her thinking behind the new book, Mrs. Renich stated: "Many confusing contemporary philosophies are contributing to the disintegration of marriage and family living. The point and purpose for a happy home have been lost."

"Young people are confused, and older people are searching. Many are looking with hope to those who have found the way into a satisfying, solid and harmonious married life."

"God, who designed marriage for companionship and purposeful living, has also given many instructions and illustrations in the Bible for the 'how to'."

SHE RECOMMENDED that the book be used with the Bible as a study guide by women seeking to improve their own marriages as well as by young women contemplating marriage.

"Mothers will find help here to guide their daughters into happy marriage," the preface added. "What a joy it has been to share these principles with our oldest daughter, Jan, who now is a happy wife."

Mrs. Renich was born in China of missionary parents and she and her husband have four children, Jan, Rose, Rick and Lynn.

Her "Winning Women" ministry was started in 1951 when the couple were serving as missionaries in Australia.

Abortion, which is clearly a matter of state rather than federal law, has now been turned into a presidential election issue.

In Omaha, just four days prior to the Nebraska primary election, the Catholic Archbishop of Omaha, "The True Voice," ran a large ad from "Citizens Concerned for the Preservation of Life" — which charged South Dakota's Sen. George McGovern with advocating liberalization of abortion law.

Like a majority of Americans (including individual Catholics, as revealed by recurrent polls), the senator opposes the demand for abortion to victims of rape, incest and serious hazards of health. He replied that this 11th hour attack was a phony issue to inject into a presidential election.

He still lost Omaha to Hubert Humphrey, whose longstanding friendship with McGovern was apparently not quite deep enough to prompt him to repudiate such tactics.

IN NEBRASKA, just five days before the State Legislature voted to repeal its recent liberalization of abortion law (which in two years has substantially reduced illegal abortions, maternal deaths, infant mortality and illegitimacy), Archbishop Terrence Cardinal Cooke utilized similar minute tactics in releasing a letter from President Nixon.

Just what "unspeakable" means was vividly demonstrated during successive press conferences, when Cardinal Cooke and later Philadelphia's Cardinal John Krol were asked if the physicians perpetrating this "unspeakable crime" were guilty of murder, manslaughter or what?

Cooke: "How you want to phrase it is your problem."

Krol: "I don't know any physicians who do such things. My doctor has 16 children."

THE CARDINALS' reluctance to charge most of the medical profession (as well as millions of mothers) with murder is understandable — particularly in their apparent desire not to be associated with some of the fanatical opponents of liberalized abortion:

Bishop Joseph Bernardin of the U.S. Catholic Conference, in Washington replied that Judge Norton provided no documentation for such charges which, he said, proved unfounded after investigation.

• "Americans United for Life?" led by actress Loretta Young, produced a large ad illustrated with a giant scalped and beheaded, "Merry Christmas, Herod!" Without actually mentioning physicians and pregnant women, the ad charged: "the slaughter of the holy innocents is now legal. Every day hundreds of innocent babies are being executed in cold blood." (In Honolulu, State Senator Vincent Yano, a Catholic who supported abortion liberalization, has received phone calls at 3 A.M. in which a weepy voice tells him, "I'm one of the babies you killed.")

• Fordham professor Robert Bryne, understandably restrained by attempt to have himself appointed legal guardian for every embryo in the city of New York, now goes about exhibiting photographs of fetuses in a bag or clutched in a hand. (Not to be outdone in good taste, Minnesota's medieval weekly, "The Wanderer," in best National Enquirer style, front-paged the following headline: "Fetus thrown from crowd at Boston hockey game.")

The majority of major Protestant churches and Jewish bodies, who have resolved in favor of liberalized abortion laws, appear by contrast to have become overconfident in view of the most recent legislative and judicial actions on the subject. But unless they and other abortion law reform advocates begin to focus sharp scrutiny upon President Nixon and all other political candidates, their cause may be lost.
