How Home Garden Can Use Potted Plants

Let your plants "go to pot" to solve some outdoor decorating problems.

Do you need a spot of color on the patio? Could you use a special accent by the front door? Is your porch dull and empty looking?

Plants growing in pots can provide just the right touch in all these situations. In fact, the plant and the pot in which it is growing can be selected to fit almost any situation.

POTS CAN BE big and bold—of fiber glass, asbestos, cement, ceramic or wood and the plants they hold can be large and dramatic.

Or pots can be small and fragile, filled with dainty plants just meant for close, careful viewing.

Pots can be used singly, or they can be grouped.

Try a dwarf Japanese maple, a mugho pine or an azalea in a large pot beside the front entrance.
These could be shaped and trained like a Japanese bonsai.

One gardener in the area has placed huge white pots near her swimming pool. These, filled with red geraniums and variegated vinca vine, make a great splash.

Another gardener moves his Schefflera and other large house plants onto a shady patio for the summer. They are as decorative there as they are indoors and the plants thrive in the fresh air.

Another gardener has lined up clay pots so they march down a short flight of stairs from her porch. Each red clay pot is overflowing with pale pink petunias.

AN ADVANTAGE OF pot gardening is that the pots can be shifted around to create new arrangements. flowers can be placed where they are wanted for their peak bloom and then replaced later with something else.

Don't forget to water outdoor potted plants frequently. They may need watering daily because they dry out quickly.

A little fertilizer every week or two for flowering plants will keep them blooming.
