[By Rev. Lee, Pastor]

A week from next Sunday will be Peace Day and following this on the 24th of May will be Memorial Day.

Remember the Sunday school at 11:30.

Epworth League at 6:15 will be led by Ernestine Pierce.

Washington The re—Detroit

Engagement of English Grand Opera extended. Next week, The Bohemian Girl.

The action of the drama commences at the chateau of Count Arnheim in Austria. The peasantry and retainers of the count are preparing for the chase, when Thaddeus, a Polish exile and fugitive from the Austrian troops, arrives in search of shelter.

A band of gypsies gives him a disguise and puts the pursuers on the wrong track. The count's child and her attendant attacked by an infuriated stag in the forest and Thaddeus shoots the animal and saves them from destruction.

Overjoyed at seeing his child alive the count invites Thaddeus to join in the festivities to take place. They seat themselves at the table and the count proposes a toast, "Health and long life to the Emperor." All do honor to the toast except Thaddeus, whose silence is observed and when the count challenges him to empty the cup Thaddeus dashes the wine to the earth. Thaddeus is saved by Devilshoof, the head of the gypsies.

The latter is seized and carried into the castle and Thaddeus departs. During the fight Devilshoof escapes carrying with him the count's infant daughter, Arline.

Twelve years elapse between the first and second acts. With the queen of the tribe of gypsies dwells Arline, now a fine young woman. Thaddeus, who has joined the tribe, is enamored of Arline and he tells her the secret of her birth.

Arline confesses her love for Thaddeus and they are betrothed according to the custom of the gypsies.

A grand fair is in progress and hither comes all the gypsies. Florestein appears and is quite fascinated with Arline's beauty. He recognizes his medallion hanging on her neck and charges her with having stolen it. Arline is arrested and brought before Count Arnheim. The count perceives the mark left by the wound inflicted by the deer on Arline's arm and asks the origin. She repeats the story as related to her by Thaddeus and the count recognizes her as his lost child.

In the third act we find her in the home of her father, but the change in her prospects does not diminish her love for Thaddeus and Count Arnheim, in gratitude to the savior of his child, bestows her upon him.

The exchange is now in shape to properly take care of new subscribers and Manager Burt is ready to take new contracts and supply service as fast as it is needed.

AN UNWELCOME VISITOR.

Everybody Should Treat Him Just as This Sensible Man Did.

There was a light knock at the outer door, and the child who was playing on the floor with her grandfather suddenly looked up.

"Somebody's knocking, gran'pa," she said. "Shall I go?"

"I guess I know who who it is," the grandfather replied. "I saw him looking in the window just now. Yes, you may go."

So the child opened the door and looked out and presently came back.

"It's an old, old man, gran'pa, an' he says his name is Old Age, an' he's got a lot of things in a basket for you."

The grandfather laughed.

"He's making a duty call, dearie," he said. "Did he mention what he had in the basket?"

"Some of the things, gran'pa. He's got aches and pains and shakiness and weakness."

The grandfather laughed again.

"A full supply, eh? Well, dearie, you go back and tell him I'm so busy playing with you that I haven't any time to bother with him. Just tell him there's nothing doing today."

"And if he won't go away, gran'pa?"

"Then you tell him there's an old boy in here who will come out and chase him down the highway. But I guess he's got sense enough to see he can't do business with us—we're much too young for him. But wait, sweetheart. Tell him that some time when he has a long, long sleep in his basket he can leave it at the door. But there's no hurry."

So the child went to the door and delivered her message and came back.

"It's your shot, gran'pa," she said.

And their laughter mingled—
