SC To Expand One Building

The next expansion on the Schoolcraft College campus in Livonia will be a $250,000 addition to the Liberal Arts Building providing six classrooms and 12 faculty offices.

The college's board of trustees authorized the architectural firm of Ralls-Hamill-Becker-Carne Inc. to proceed with plans for the 6,000 foot addition to be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1973.

The firm had studied each building on campus to determine which would accept an addition with its current heating and electrical capacity. By hooking up with current electrical and heating capacities, the college will save the expense of adding these services within the addition.

THE ADDITION can be tacked onto the liberal arts building without any new service to the air conditioning unit also.

"The addition puts classrooms and offices where we want them and where we will need them in the future without modification," Schoolcraft President C. Nelson Grote said in recommending the project.

Originally, college administrators thought they would need the classroom space for this fall. But the decreasing trend in enrollments indicated the college would grow at a slightly slower pace this year, affording time to build permanent classrooms rather than use temporary structures.

The college will finance the addition with money left in the building and site fund. By carefully watching capital improvement expenditures, administrators and board have kept enough money in the fund to create the classroom addition.

Future construction may be undertaken when the college pays off its initial bond issue, giving it the capacity to float more than $3 million in bonds in 1973. If the college can get matching funds from the state, it will then have the capacity of building $7 million in new construction.

Novak joined the Industrial National Bank in 1954 and became affiliated with Manufacturers in 1955 when the two banks merged. He is in charge of the bank's office on Eight Mile and Schaefer.

ROBERT W. CADOTTE, 30125 Grandon, Livonia, was named vice president of Manufacturers Bank in Detroit. Cadotte holds a law degree from the University of Detroit. He joined Manufacturers Bank in 1947 and worked in the trust, legal and commercial loan departments. He is currently assigned to the mortgage department. Active in the Michigan, Detroit and Livonia Bar Assns., Cadotte is a member of the Wolverine Club and a trustee of Schoolcraft College Foundation.

WCCC Benefits, 3 Schools Lose

Redford Township and Wayne-Westland schools will lose a total of $192,000 from their county allocation to Wayne County Community College this year.

Since voters have repeatedly refused to approve millage for the college, Wayne County is deducting one-quarter mill from the county allocation to each of the local school districts within the WCCC district to support the college.

Translated into dollars and cents, the one-quarter mill means a loss of $35,000 to Redford Union, $67,000 to South Redford and $90,360 to Wayne-Westland.

Detroit schools were hardest hit by the tax allocation board decision since they will lose $1.5 million.

Other school districts in Observerland were spared the cutback because they belong to the Schoolcraft College district and thus already support a community college.

RESIDENTS in the Livonia, Clarenceville, Garden City and Plymouth school districts pay 1.77 mills to support Schoolcraft. Each of these school districts will receive the full 8.9 mill allocation from the college.

Both Redford Union and South Redford were cut back from 6.9 to 6.65 this year while Wayne-Westland was cut back from 8.9 to 8.65 mills this year.

South Redford Supt. Joseph Rzepka said district officials went before the tax allocation board to argue against the cut but the board went ahead and voted to deduct the quarter mill.

"I don't like to see the local school district lose anything," he said.

Rzepka said the allocation to WCCC was "arbitrarily handled by the Legislature to pay for the college after the people voted it down several times."

Redford Union Supt. Paul Shoemaker agreed, saying the action bypasses the voters who have voted down millage requests for the college.

THE SCHOOLS are continually losing money through court decisions and legislation, Shoemaker said, citing the decision last summer that the schools had to provide students with whatever materials and books they needed in school.

The $35,000 loss to the district will be spread out over various budget areas, he said.

Ron Somers, public relations director in Wayne-Westland, said the $90,360 loss is relatively insignificant to their $23 million budget.

"We don't begrudge them the money," Somers said. "We'll have to tighten our belts and share with them a little bit.

"I'd much rather see it this way than have residents pay an additional millage."

WCCC uses school buildings throughout the district for classes since it hasn't funds to build a campus. The college has a total operating budget of $8.3 million for next year including the money garnished from local school district funds.

One reason the financing was shifted from the general fund of Wayne County to the school districts was to avoid taxing some Wayne County residents for two community colleges.
