

Foster Grandparents Get Instant Stardom

MRS. FLORENCE GOULD brushes the hair of her foster grandchild, Paula, before the cameras begin to roll for the documentary.

As the camera crew rolled in, Plymouth State Home's foster grandparents and their "adopted" grandchildren became instant stars for a film that will be shown on nationwide television this fall. The Foster Grandparent Program was filmed by a six-member television crew from Trio Productions for a half-hour documentary on an "Action" as independent federal agency on volunteer work.

Purpose of the film is to acquaint the public with the department, according to Barbara Coleman, deputy director of public affairs. The Foster Grandparent Program is a part of Action, as is the Peace Corps and Volunteers in Service To America (VISTA).

There were 67 projects with 4,400 foster grandparents," she said. "Now there are 140 projects with a goal of over 12,000 volunteers."

IT GIVES retired persons a meaningful job while helping them to supplement their retirement income. And at the same time, it is a way for the retarded children to get the individual attention and affection that an institution can't otherwise give them.

Foster grandparents are each assigned two children. They work four hours a day, five days a week. The program provides an opportunity for senior citizens to put their talents to work and at the same time help the retarded child feel someone cares.

Supt. William Womak says foster grandparents are a big help with the children.

SALARY REMAINS the chief unsettled item in Clarenceville, where the board of education's chief negotiator, Harold R. Humble, said talks "are moving but not as rapidly as we would like." The Clarenceville Education Assn. (CEA), the teachers' union, and the board agreed to extend to Sept. 15 last year's pact with any improvements retroactive to the Aug. 31 expiration date. A negotiating session was scheduled for Tuesday night. Talks now center on the "salary package," Humble said, with some economic fringe benefits settled and some not. Salary remained the chief point at issue. CEA and board bargainers have agreed to keep secret the new salary demands and offers, Humble said.

SOUTH REDFORD negotiations center on four clauses reopenable for the second year of a two-year contract. They cover salary, sick leave, insurance and class size. No firm date for
