Robert A. Hover, a 20-year-old Detroit artist, says that you need a longish hallway to get the full benefit of his unusual prints. The idea is that you have to back away from his pictures until suddenly the squares flow in together, and you see that you actually have a portrait of comedian Groucho Marx.

Hover's prints and three-dimensional constructions are on sale in the Habatat Gallery, 1820 N. Telegraph, Dearborn.

His black, white and gray portrait of Laurel and Hardy won a gold medal in the 1972 Graphic Artists Guild Show in Detroit. Since then, he has won prizes with exhibitions across the country, and his work has been shown in New York and Paris.

One of his current projects is a full-length print of Charlie Chaplin.
