

DEATH OF LOUIS GIL- DEMEISTER BLOW TO A HOST OF FRIENDS

One of Farmington's most prominent and highly respected citizens and business men breathed his last at his home in the village last Sunday morning, death coming peacefully shortly after one o'clock to Louis Gildemeister.

While his condition has not been good during late years, and more or less critical during the past few months, the news of his death came as a severe shock to the entire community.

A few months ago his condition took a turn for the worse, and he was taken to one of the Detroit hospitals in the hope that treatment could be secured that would be of benefit. This was finally found to be impossible, and the matter of his early demise has been known by members of the family since that time. All efforts to check the death dealing affliction were finally discarded as useless.

Nineteen years ago he removed with his family to this place from Northville, where he established the Farmington Roller Mills, and his careful and capable business ability is attested to by the immense and modern plant and business that he has built up, as well as by a great deal of other property he has acquired.

His upright personal and business dealings have made for him a place in the hearts of scores of men and women, that will never be erased nor forgotten.

Louis Gildemeister was born at Gross, Buetow, Northern Germany, on October 7th, 1858, and was therefore at the time of death, 55 years, 10 months and 16 days of age. Little is known of his childhood life, but it is known that he came from a line of forefathers, all of whom were engaged in the milling industry, his own father being a miller. At the age of 14, he entered a competitive mill where he served his apprenticeship, later traveling through the country as a journeyman.

He first came to the United States in 1883, for the purpose of studying milling conditions in this country, but with no intent of remaining. After a short stay in Wisconsin, he came on to Michigan for a visit with a sister, Mrs. Chris Spaller. Shortly afterward he secured employment at the Plymouth Mill, and about a year later went to Northville, where he was also engaged at his chosen trade, and where he made his home for eight years. It was during his residence there that he was married to Miss Amelia Paskel, and to this union were born six children, all of whom survive their father.

In 1895 he removed to this place, and during 1912 their silver wedding anniversary was celebrated. Three years ago, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, he made a visit to his native land.

He was a member of the German Evangelical church, and one of its most liberal supporters. He was also a member of the Masonic and K. P. Lodges.

Besides his wife and six children, Leo, Emma, Edwin, Lillian (Gul-len), George and Hartha, and little grandson, he is survived by two sisters and two brothers, one of the former, Mrs. Chris Spaller, living here, and the others in their native home.

A short funeral service was conducted from the home at one o'clock Wednesday afternoon, followed by a service at the church, the service being in charge of the Rev. A. Stange. Grand Lawn cemetery was chosen as the final resting place for the remains, interment being in charge of Undertaker Zessau.

Farmington and Farmington people have indeed lost one of their best friends and citizens, and the heartfelt sympathy of a host of friends goes out to the grief stricken relatives.
