Dan Goodwin, an American globe trotter, when the big: European war broke out was in Birnagels. Dan always wanted to be in everything, but in an independent capacity. As for seeing the sight in the ranks, that was not to his taste. He had no mind to be bossed, and, as for living in a tranch, he infinitely preferred a front room in a hotel.

De bossen, and, as for living in a trench, he infinitely preferred a front room in a hotel.

Leaving Brussels, he went to Liege, then to the top of a high hill and reached the Germans mash the works defending that city. He found it very pleasant looking on trens a safe distance, watching successive missels and noting the damage they did or their failure to do damage. He enjoyed the bomberdnent for some time without getting into any danger, then one morning whose up to find the city in possession of the Germans. This was getting too near to the other aids, and, availing himself of his American passport, he withdrew to Brussells. One morning Dan years from which to look for a lot of the Germans. As I was resting at the top of a long hill it was overtaken by a man on horseback, and after salutations had been exchanged be observed that he was in no burry and would get down to smoke a pipe with mo. After awhile he announced that he was the country sheriff and was then on his way to recepture a prisoner who had broken out of jell at Simthville the night before. The prisoner lived in a cubit a short distance down the road, and as we find the prisoner lived in a cubit a short distance down the road, and as we find the prisoner lived in a cubit a short distance down the road, and as we find the prisoner lived in the formance.

"But is the togitive a dangerous man and the down of you mean to take him?" "Oh. Pil be sort of sort and gentle with him, and if there is going to be any shooting you'll have warning in time to get out." It was summer time, and when we reached the cabin the escaped prisoner sat on the doorstep with a shoigun a cross his knees and a pipe between his teeth. His wife, who was also smoking, ast on a log item by her liberation as tume within the pair never even looked, and hitching his control of the wink to a same of the family as close at hand while the pair never even looked and the shell." The shell the said:

"Tom. I reckion yo' her come for me!"

"Skassly, Bill, skassly," replied the shelf as he looked up in seculing urprise.

"Tive is rill never be tooked beto the family arresting the rill never be tooked to that fall alive!" growled the fugitive beto token her to the said:

"Tive is rill never be tooked beto the fall alive!" growled the fugitive beto token her to the control of the pair of

"If yo has I'll never be tooken back to that fall alive?" growled the fugiture.

I glanced at the wife, and the look on her face and the way she diagered the art told plainly that she was ready to stand by her hosband in case he needed help.

"Don't git oneasy," advised the the fift. Then he began to tell me shout the county fall. It wasn't so much to look at from the outside and lots of people thereby got a wrong impression of it. One must become a prisoner to appreciate that fall.

The beds were of the best.
The fare was the bost.
Once a death short! came in and related the short of the control of

"It's better than bein' right yere at hoorse."

And then the sheriff went on to say that when holidays came the prisoners got such a feast as few men outside ever got. Besides mined ple and fried oysters, there were ten/cent clgars to smoke and champagne to drink.

"But Bill must have mistook about it," said the wife.

"Mirs. Baker, I bute to say anything to a wife about her husband," answered the officer, "but I must tell you that I never had any one in my Jall so ornery as your Bill. He was kicking like a mewl all the time."

"But I wanted to git outer Jall," said Bill.
