An Old Saw.

"Early to bed, early to rise, makes men healthy, wealthy and wise." Thus runs the old saw, and there's more to it, probably, than many of us are willing to admit. Rushing things is all right if not carried too far. But some people in their mad desire to bag everything in sight, over do it. To this class belongs the old lady who went to the stairway and yelled to her grown-up daughter, "Sally! Sally! Get up! Get up! Here it is four o'clock Monday morning, tomorrow's Tuesday, next day's Wednesday—half the week gone and nothing done yet!"

Everybody Should Read the Newspapers.

Without entering into any controversy as to whether newspapers are as good as they ought to be—only to say that they are as good as the "public wants to have them"—any man makes a mistake by not being a newspaper reader. There is a certain quality of mind says Dr. Parkhurst in the New York American, that stands aloof from the fugitive literature of the day, and with an air of intellectual superciliousness limits its attention to the bound records of earlier centuries, claiming that a volume of ancient history is something quite distinct from a sheet of current news. But history was current news once, and is another name for current news embalmed and laid in the mausoleum. So that we can say that history is dead news and news is live history—events with breath still in them and the blood still beating; and of the two a warm body is preferable to a cadaver; more sociable, more entertaining, more stimulating. Besides that, it is not the past we belong to, but the present. There is no objection to casting an occasional glance at the painted portraits of our ancestors, but our interest and most vital associations will be with our friends. Yesterday is dead; tomorrow is not born; today is alive and by its touch communicates life.
