Local Role Needed In State Land Plans

Michigan is in dire need of a land preservation policy, but it must ensure strong local participation if it is to succeed, according to the chairman of the Wayne County Board of Commissioners, Robert E. FitzPatrick.

This was the emphasis of FitzPatrick's testimony before a state legislative committee during public airing of a proposed land use bill under consideration by the House of Representatives.

Held in Detroit's City-County Building, the hearing was conducted by the House Committee on Towns and Counties, and chaired by Rep. Phil O. Mastin Jr. (D-Hazel Park).

Mastin is sponsor of House Bill 9555 which would establish a Michigan land use plan to guide public and private land development, and create a seven-member Land Use Commission to implement provisions of the plan.

The plan would protect prime agricultural, state historical and other unique lands by regulating the extent and quality of development in these areas.

FitzPatrick, speaking also as first vice-president of the Michigan Association of Counties, said county governments are prepared to support land use planning if it stresses local decision-making as well as state guidance.

He called local participation "an indispensable ingredient if the proposed land use legislation is to be successful," and said that "county government and all other levels of government have vital roles to play in the planning process."

"It must be recognized that there are local issues which must be solved—and can only be solved—by those who are intimately familiar with the roots of the problems," he stated.

FitzPatrick also declared a need for a stronger county role in land use planning.
