Since Schoolcraft College opened its center at Garden City during the summer, activities have expanded.

Now heading the program is Clay Fechter, former director of social services who was re-assigned from the campus. Fechter spends the majority of his time in Garden City and has been instrumental in preparing and equipping the center for students this fall. He also serves as director of public and human services for the college.

Most furniture and equipment has been completed at the center, 28205 Florence, although a number of items are still on order and are expected soon. A student lounge has been equipped with vending machines and allows a place for students to gather between classes.

Student affairs began offering some additional services at the center in August. Two counselors, Jean Pike and Ronald Rogowski, have been assigned to the center on Wednesday mornings and are available to talk with students.

On Thursday afternoons, Robert Burside, an admissions counselor, is also available for students by appointment. A person need not be admitted to the college to take advantage of these services.

Nearly 350 students were attending day and evening when classes began at the center Aug. 23.

At the end of September, five community services classes began, adding another 100 students.

On Oct. 2, and continuing each Tuesday through Nov. 13, the Senior Forum meets from 10 a.m. to noon. The Senior Forum is a program for retirees which gives them an opportunity to meet together and discuss important issues in retirement living.

On consecutive Wednesdays during October, the college is presenting, in cooperation with Garden City Jaycees, three programs entitled health seminar. The first topic for discussion was the area of drug abuse.

The second program covered venereal disease, and the third program will cover
