"much faith and trust in her intuition." One example of this came during a scene with Flynn in "They Died With Their Boots On."

The scene concerned Gen. Custer and his wife in a paring where the actors were asked to project the feeling that they knew they would never see one another again.

"I had an overwhelming feeling that this was a real farewell between me and Errol. I've had those feelings before, and I knew we would never work together again. And we didn't," she said.

Of the people she became acquainted with during her Hollywood days, she values most her friendship with Bette Davis. "I have so much love and respect for that woman," she said.

Miss de Haviland now lives in Paris, France, and has two children, Benjamin, now 24, working toward his degree in mathematics, and Gizelle, 17, who attends secondary school. Benjie lives with her, and Gizelle lives across the street with her father, from whom Miss deHaviland is separated.

At the celebrity luncheon which followed the morning talk, Miss deHaviland put on some attractive glasses to answer questions from the guests. (In spite of years, pounds and glasses, no one would have any trouble recognizing that distinctive smile.)

Of her age, she said, "I am one year, three months, three weeks and one day older than Joan."

Of her feud with her sister, Joan Fontaine, she said, "We are very close. And very high strung. So we go for long periods without speaking." She was her sister's house guest, however, while she was in New York during this tour and said, "We had such a pleasant time I was even asked to stay over for another day."

BETTY JOHNS, president of the Soroptomists, greets Olivia deHaviland, who opened the Farmington Town Hall series for the fall and winter of 1973. (Evert photo)
