Can flannel and terry music and march?

Girls take more than something borrowed to their marriages these days. They take a lingerie trousseau as well as just going-away clothing. Some admitted accumulating frilly lingerie over a period of years, then putting the lingerie into a hope chest—or more likely, the bottom left dresser drawer.

One young bride admitted to buying for her "bridal lingerie trousseau" for years. "That way, the older salesladies aren't upset when I buy something sexy."

AND SOMETHING sexy seems to be what the girls are looking for. Penny Lambrose of the Glassford Shop said girls are buying white sexy things before their weddings. "They're buying things their mothers couldn't have bought. The girls are slimmer now because so many are exercising," she said. Bloomers hid a lot, but a bikini, either as a swimsuit or underwear, won't hide a thing. Exercise has become significant in what girls can buy to wear.

"AND LONG gowns are becoming more popular," she said. "They're more sophisticated than the baby dolls. The baby dolls don't sell as well as they used to, but they're still popular."

Barbara Corafield of Femme-Femme Lingerie said brides and brides-to-be are buying more practical lingerie than previously. Long gowns, flannels and robes have been unusually popular.

Penny Lambrose said she also was selling more heavy garments, but she didn't know whether this was because of 68-degree thermostats or girls becoming more practical.

TERRY CAN BE WARM AND SEXY

MARCHING DOWN THE AISLE

be the accompaniment for a brisk exit by the wedding party.

"There is no need for it to be a march, because no one will bother to follow the beat after the excitement of the ceremony," one director said.

He suggested that he sometimes just improvises rather than play something specific, but among his suggestions for recognizable music are Bach's Toccata and Fugue, Brahm's St. Anthony's Chorale and some parts of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Most churches can supply lists of material they feel is appropriate to the setting. It is best to ask the church office about organists' or soloists' fees, but either should be paid before the ceremony.

An average musical director's fee is under $50; for a singer it is from $25 to $35.
