

Judge limits A & P boycotts

By SUSAN L. SILK
United Farm Workers (UFW) members and sympathizers are no longer allowed to urge a shopper boycott of A & P stores but can ask shoppers not to buy non-UFW produce, according to a recent circuit court ruling.
Oakland County Circuit Court Judge William P. Hampton Tuesday granted A & P supermarkets a permanent injunction against the secondary boycotting of their stores by the UFW.
A secondary boycott occurs when a group attempts to force a business to accede to its demands (in which the business does not have a direct role) by causing a dropoff in sales.
THE 22 A & P STORES in Oakland County were picketed by as many as 100 UFW members and sympathizers last fall.

Shoppers were asked to boycott A & P stores in protest of their alleged sale of non-UFW picked produce, according to Richard Chavez, area UFW organizer.
The pickets were organized after the UFW lost collective bargaining with produce growers in California last April. The growers, instead, signed agreements with the Teamsters union.
UFW members went out on strike and in November were still away from their jobs, Chavez said.
DEMONSTRATORS at a number of A & P stores in Oakland and Macomb counties brought out the police and on one occasion several, including clergymen, were arrested. Charges against the demonstrators were later dropped.
Hampton issued a temporary restraining order against the UFW on Nov. 26, specifying that no more than eight pickets could demonstrate at each store and that entrances and exits were to be unobstructed.
On Monday, Hampton ruled that future picketing and protests by the UFW would be illegal unless their literature, signs and handbills asked only that shoppers boycott non-UFW picked produce.
THE STORE BOYCOTTS demanded by picketers constituted a secondary boycott, Hampton ruled, since the ultimate purpose of the UFW has been to force the growers into contracts with the UFW.
Since only state laws apply to agricultural workers, Hampton said it was his opinion that secondary boycotts in Michigan are illegal.

Strike threatened

Contract talks in 5th month

By BARBARA UNDERWOOD
BLOOMFIELD HILLS—Auxiliary services employees of the Bloomfield Hills School District will meet Sunday in a continuing attempt to settle a contract dispute which has been in negotiations for five months.
The employees represent the transportation, food services, custodial and maintenance staffs and are members of Local 1384 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME). Their previous contract with the school district expired Dec. 31, 1973.
At a similar meeting last Sunday the majority of the members present failed to ratify a proposed three-year contract. Previously members of both the union's and the board of education's negotiating teams had given tentative approval to the contract.
UNION OFFICIALS gave verbal notice to the board of education and administration Monday of the possibility of a strike within 10 working days of the time of notice.
Written notice was delivered Tuesday to the effect that if a settlement has not been reached by 11:59 p.m. Monday, April 8; a strike would ensue.

John A. Candela, director of personnel and labor relations for the district, will meet with the union negotiating team Thursday (March 28) to find out what the concerns are.
CANDELA said the contract had been a difficult one to negotiate, particularly in the areas of short-term disability insurance benefits and a wage schedule that would be fair in light of an inflationary economy.
Parents of district school children were notified Monday that a work-stoppage could occur at any time during the 10-day period.
They were advised to instruct their children not to wait more than 15 minutes at their bus stops and then to return home. In the event of a strike, parents were asked to deliver their children to school with a lunch.
DR. FRED D. THORIN, superintendent, was confident Tuesday afternoon that "we will work our way out of it."

Course set for educators

Politics as it affects the teacher from within and without the educational system will be examined in a university-level course being offered by Michigan State University at King'swood School Tuesday evenings April 2 to June 4.
The seminar, designed primarily for area educators, will explore the relative impact of organized interests including parent associations, taxpayer groups, teacher organizations and unions and that of federal, state and local governmental units.
It also will deal with actual power and control within the system from school boards and administrators down to individual teachers.
INPUT OF CLASS members' individual experiences will constitute a major element of the seminar, according to Dr. Edward A. Duane, associate professor of social science at MSU, who will conduct the course.
Persons completing the course will have a deeper and more workable understanding of the power processes which affect the educational system in which he operates.
Further information on the seminar may be obtained from MSU's Continuing Education Center, P.O. Box 827, Bloomfield Hills.

Romney reviews book at library

Former Sec. of Housing and Urban Development George Romney will review a book entitled "The American Condition" Thursday (March 28) at the Bloomfield Township Public Library.
Starting at 12:30 p.m. in the Green Room, Romney, a Bloomfield Hills resident, will be one of three local guests reviewing books for the spring series at the library, located at 1099 Lone Pine Road, Bloomfield Hills.
"The American Condition" by Richard Goodwin focuses on the problem of freedom. Goodwin defines freedom as the "fulfillment of our humanity" and sees its greatest potential for realization in the modern world.
Next in the library's series (on April 3) will be William Peck, curator of ancient art at the Detroit Institute of Arts, who will review "Art Fakes in America" by David L. Goodrich.

Maple Road to be widened

The Oakland County Road Commission has approved an agreement between the Michigan Department of Highways and the City of Troy for widening to five lanes a half-mile of Maple Road from just east of Livernois to a point west of Rochester Road.
"Federal Urban Funds will pay 70 percent of the estimated $799,530 project cost," said William M. Richards, road commission chairman.

Now, we don't have anything against duckbilled platypi. Nor against Cleveland either—such as it is. But for those who don't know, Osmun's is probably the nearest, nicest, niftiest men's store you'd ever want to buy something from.

Osmun's is a place you can stroll into and find the latest and greatest styles and fashions of clothing. Like bold, colorful Enro shirts in snappy stripes, checks and solids.

And Osmun's is people. Nice people. Knowledgeable people. Who'll take the time and effort to make sure you walk away pleased that you walked in.

That's what an Osmun's is. So if someone asks, for heaven's sakes don't go sending them to Cleveland.

Osmun's
Fashion for men and young men.

An Osmun's is not a large, egg-laying, web-footed mammal found only in and around the Greater Cleveland Area.
