

Careers, job seekers, meet at Harrison

By NANCY STEIN

Experts in their fields, volunteered to talk to students at Harrison High School, not once, but three times, three hours in a row, about their work.

They explained work to the kids, told them the pleasures, the drawbacks and the requirements. As a result, Harrison's Career Day program was an overwhelming success.

As expected TV newsman Bill Bonds and Ray Lane, sportscaster were tremendously popular.

Not anticipated at all were the overflow crowds that came to listen to David McCabe, from McCabe Funeral Home.

But then, that's why there were 45 different speakers.

THE PROGRAM was put together by the combined efforts of Nancy Rollinson, a counselor at the school and Claire Orsini, director of Farmington Youth Employment Services (YES).

Ms. Rollinson conducted a survey among students asking what three professions or fields of endeavor they would like to know more about. When it was done she tabulated the results and came up with a list of the 45 most interesting to the students.

Ms. Orsini and her assistant, Patsy Smith took it from there. They found the expert and persuaded them to speak to the students.

It all came together last week.

It was so successful that "30 of the 46 speakers asked when they could do it again," said Ms. Orsini.

An evaluation card filled out by students after it was over indicated a great success with a desire to have it repeated next year.

"This is the first time I ever really heard about these things from people who know them," said a student who asked that his name be withheld.

"I thought I wanted to be a lawyer, but now that I hear what it's really like, it's not for me."

"I didn't realize there was so much constant bookwork and study."

That's the kind of thing one can learn at a career day program.

House stalls land bill

By JACKIE KLEIN

A strengthened version of a watered-down state land use measure is stalled in the house appropriations committee.

"One of the amendments would guarantee the independence of a Land Use Commission even though it is lodged in the Department of Natural Resources," said Joe Guggenheim, executive director of the Michigan Committee on Law and Housing with offices in Southfield.

"I believe the bill is being held up in committee because certain elements in the Department of Natural Resources are exerting influence."

Guggenheim initiated a coalition which participated in amending the proposed bill and removed what it considered objectionable features.

The original bill, introduced in 1972 by Rep. Philip Mastin (D-Hazel Park) placed the power to influence zoning decisions on large-scale developments in the hands of a state land use commission.

AMENDMENTS to that bill gave powers to the Department of Natural Resources, referred to by coalition members as "the largest landowner in the state." The amended bill would have weakened the position of the proposed land use commission.

Other coalition amendments, said Guggenheim would:

- Adequately include urban concerns in the state policy statement.
- Guarantee adequate input by regional agencies when the land use plan is drawn up.
- Insure that municipalities don't have an almost unlimited right to insert existing local planning in the state land use plan.
- Require the state land use plan to include on an advisory basis goals and objectives of policies and programs to implement them.

• Broaden the right of individual citizens to initiate appeals and take legal action to compel compliance with the state land use act.

"OUR GOAL," said Guggenheim, "is that urban needs be better expressed. The purpose of state land use legislation is to end fragmentation and conflict that prevents wise use of our limited land resources."

"Legislation is needed to assist in the decision making on development with an area or state wide perspective, rather than just a local viewpoint."

The state should have a voice in decisions to protect unique natural areas, control urban sprawl, stimulate urban development and prevent arbitrary zoning that totally excludes lower income housing in many communities.

Guggenheim admits the amended bill is not the optimum, but it is substantial. Some concerned individuals have advised that even a watered-down bill is better than none at all and would be a foot in the door.

"I'm not prepared to sell out," Guggenheim insisted. "Maybe there will be a more liberal Democratic shift in the house after the next election."
