Burglars hit party store

FARMINGTON—A thief who broke into the quick pick Party Store after the store closed Sept. 1 managed to get away with $2089 worth of currency and goods.

The police report indicated that it was possible that the culprit or culprits were familiar with the store since they knew exactly where the hidden safe was located and knew which bolt to work on when entering the building.

According to the police the culprits entered the party store through a rear steel door which they pried open with crow bars.

The report said that although it was impossible to tell from the outside where the bolts were, and who they worked, the culprits knew which bolt to locate and pry open.

The breaking and entering occurred between 11:15 p.m. Sept. 1 and 7 a.m. Sept. 2, during the time when the store is closed.

It was reported to the Farmington police department by the owner William Heft on Monday morning when he went to open the store.

"Dad's more independent than ever since he moved to the Center."

Dad's always been one for living his own life. And he taught me a lot about the best way to live mine. When he retired, I wanted him to get the most out of his leisure years.

But it was tough. I used to worry about him. He didn't want to move in with me and my family. Said he was too set in his ways. Maybe he was right. But I didn't think he should go on living alone in that big house. It was just too much work.

That was just one of the reasons I was so pleased when Dad told me about the Center. It's the sort of place that's right for an active person like Dad. He can keep his independence and still have some of the rest and pampering I think he's earned.

Each resident has his own apartment on a Life Membership basis. It's theirs to furnish and use as they wish. It's their home. But with some important differences. At the Center, the staff takes care of the heavy cleaning and flat laundry. (And there are washers and dryers available for the resident's personal use, free of charge.) Meals aren't a problem either. The main dining room serves a varied selection of meals, three times a day. The meals are served in a beautiful setting by the Center's own staff. Not cafeteria style. And for special occasions, there are private dining rooms for entertaining family and friends.

I think that the key word for the Center is freedom. First, the freedom from the burden of maintaining a house. That leaves people like Dad free to pursue activities they really enjoy. Residents organize their own activities... and they're involved in just about anything you can think of... bridge games and hospital volunteer work, choral programs, lectures, group excursions and gardening. Some residents are still involved in the business world as consultants and part time workers.

On the whole, the Center is a resource as well as a place to live. There are hobby rooms, a library, lounges, meeting rooms, beauty and gift shops and more. Dad can even get a ride into town without waiting for me. The Center has its own bus service.

And finally, the Center is right here. Not ten states away. I can see Dad and he can see his grandchildren easily and often.

Oh, I'd never tell Dad how to live his life. But I must say I'm glad he decided to move to the Center.

It's a modern, realistic retirement alternative for people like Dad who have retired from their jobs... but not from living.
