

Do you have a summer romance with your camera? That is, do you take your camera along only when the day is nice and surny and you're on a warm-weather outing or vacation? If so, you're missing a lot of memories.

A January project I got into last week was to fill my expandable photo album with all the color pictures I snapped last year and into the new

I wasn't looking forward to this troublesome task but actually found it went reasonably quickly, a couple of hours, especially since photo shops now stamp monthly dates on the back of each print. Once I had the pictures separated by months, it was easier to divide them into events and trips.

NOW, THAT waterfront scene...was that Mackinac Island, or Cleveland, or Canada or the Bahamas...well. if it's September, it must be Cleveland. I found I seem to specialize in boating backgrounds. Unfortunately, boats docked in a harbor or someone standing against a setting of sailboats on the water can tend to photos that look alike from place to place.

Travel with camera for memories

You might look over your pictures to alse if you, too, overspecialize, or overlook the commonplace that maybe-makes a better photo. Sometimes the camera captures a smaller view more attractively than a bigger vista.

There were some trips that, for one reason or amother. I just dion't take the time to photograph—although I load my examera with me.

LOOKING BACK, I wish I had more photos of these occasions. And I shouldn't have been deterred because amene with me was shooting that same thing on movie film. "Missing links" in a photo albuin can't be re-things to photograph, but where you stayed is fun to recall.

The few hold scenes I did take—such as around the pool in Uxmal, the Yuestan in Mexico last March—showed spiecher and chans. The lavish Hold Uxmal (I think).

It would also be nice if I would keep a record of the sames and places and things photographed. By memory on these six months or a year later, when I want to put the photos sway, int as good as it is on people.

I'D LIKE TO add a caption to each photo in my album, just so I won't for-get the particulars in years to come. Maybe type this on a sit of paper, or write a line in the margin of the Once I'd put all the pictures in my album, even the mediocre ones looked a lot better. The brilliant color of the photos, contrasted against the white about pages, made the past vivid. The most satisfying part of the project was to turn the pages of the filled about and see the seasons change, from resort winder to soft spring, hot surrarer, blazing fall, floral Bahamas, and the glow and chill of winter with New Year's at a farm in the country. I'd like to try to get more pictures, too, of friends and family doing dings, rather than just grinning into the camera. This includes pictures taken of me.

I've closed the cover on my 1974-75 photo album, It's suffed. For 1975 I'm going to start a new one, and promise myself to take my camera for a lig abecture, and travelings.

I'm going to take more indoor photos. They look great in color, and all you need is to keep a big supply of flastibulis on hand.
