old sponge method. This gave the yellow colored panels an especially antique look.

The bay window in the dining room is treated with swagged drapes in a stencil pattern indicative of the era.

A Welsh pewter dresser is one of the dining room's focal points. It is lined with the couple's Bennington spatterware collection.

An elegant gate-leg table serves the family for dinner or it can be expanded for a dinner party of 12. Matching Queen Anne chairs surround the room and table.

Windsor chairs are the seating pieces around another gate-leg table which is used for games in the living room addition. The area's fireplace is encircled with a collection of small items ranging from dolls to fireplace equipment.

One wall is lined with bookshelves containing antique volumes and memorabilia. Other walls are hung with an extensive collection of American primitive paintings and prints.

The kitchen is another family center with a large center space which helps the traffic flow. All the cabinets were stripped of their old paint and then antiqued in a yellow hue. The flooring is brick and a large rag rug adds more interest to the floor. The walls are lined with antique kitchen equipment.

Every bath in the home has a unique antique feeling with special mirrors and wallpapers.

The master bedroom houses some of the most magnificent pieces in the couple's furniture and accessories collection. An elegant and worthy, despite its name, "lowboy" is in the bedroom alongside a Connecticut highboy.

A four-drawer Scotch chest in one corner was bought by cablegram correspondence with a man from Scotland who'd advertised the item in an antiques publication. It is the repository for a looking-glass and courting mirror collection.

The appreciation of the fine things in the home does not stop with the parents. The children have chosen their favorite items and even have some say in future purchases.

In this house, the translating job was not easy, but it is one the family has done well and it shows.
